TODAY'S PROGRAM...

Albert Kahn in Detroit

Dale Leslie

Dale Leslie introduced Michael Hodges, Fine Arts writer for the Detroit News and author of Building the Modern World: Albert Kahn in Detroit. Mr. Hodges is a graduate of Cranbrook and the University of Michigan.

Kahn emigrated to Detroit with his family from Germany at age 12 in 1881. Kahn did not receive any formal education after coming to the U.S. At age 13, he secured an unpaid internship with John Scott's architectural firm. A year later he began working for Mason and Rich, the firm that designed the Masonic Temple and the Grand Hotel. It is believed that Kahn designed the hotel's Great Porch. When he was 20, Kahn won a $500 fellowship to travel through Europe drawing buildings. While there he met architect Henry Bacon and the two travelled through Europe for several months. Bacon was later chosen to design the Washington Monument. After returning to Detroit at age 20, Kahn was promoted to Head Designer at Mason and Rich.

Michael Hodges

Kahn struck out on his own in 1901 and was commissioned to design the Belle Isle Conservatory and Aquarium. He went on to design the Packard Plant in Detroit, including Building 10 which was constructed with reinforced concrete which allowed for larger windows and much more light in a factory setting. He was hired by Henry Ford to design the Rouge and all other Ford plants. His 'Daylight Factory' designs, rectilinear, practical and spare, drew the attention of architects worldwide. Kahn went on to design Burton Tower, Hill Auditorium, Angell Hall, the Clements Library, Cranbrook House, the Detroit Golf Club, and the Detroit News Building. He designed more than 500 factories in Russia which were converted in wartime to produce munitions that prevented the fall of Russia and supported the allied victory. While some of his buildings were controversial, he was clearly responsible for the birth of modern architecture.

Additional information on Albert Kahn's architectural legacy can be found at <https://www.albertkahn.com/legacy>.
